Itinerary description:

The itinerary starts at the farmhouse known as Can Borrell. We'll take the path leading to the pond of Cal Borrell, which begins right beside the farmhouse cistern. We'll follow the path until we find another one branching off to the left, which will bring us to the pond. We'll arrive at the tail end of the pond, where we'll take another path that crosses over and heads up the slope on the opposite side. From there, we'll take another path on the left that will bring us to the road from Can Borrell to Sant Medir. Then, we'll turn right until we reach the hermitage of Sant Adjutori and an ancient kiln. From there, we'll return to the main path, which brings us back to Can Borrell.

Points of interest:

Can Borrell:

Located in a valley called the Vall de Gausac, this farmhouse lies halfway along the traditional road from Sant Cugat to Sant Medir. The current structure dates to the 18th century. Nearby sits the pond of Can Borrell, which collected water that was redirected to the farmhouse for agricultural uses.

Pond of Can Borrell:

This pond once supplied water for the farmhouse and fields of Can Borrell. Nowadays, waterpipes fulfil this purpose, so the pond has fallen into disuse and is used exclusively for leisure. It's a small pond with a maximum depth of around 3 meters and a dam not much wider than 6 meters. No swimming is allowed.

Church of Sant Adjutori:

A Romanesque church documented as far back as the 12th century, it probably replaced an older building built before the 10th century. Located in the middle of the valley of Gausac, it once served as a parish church within the Quadra de Vilanova. With a circular layout and no apse, it is covered by a dome made of concentric stone rings.

Kiln of Sant Adjutori:

A clay kiln from classical antiquity, possibly of Roman origin.
